Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Harvard College, the Class of 1876: Seventh Report of the Secretary, Covering the Class History for Twenty-Five Years to 1901 Entering only three years after the accession of President Eliot, we found his energy at work building a new superstructure upon the old foundation. During Freshman year we were permitted to pursue our required studies with our minds unfretted by the necessity of choosing for ourselves, but the three succeeding years compelled us to get out of leading strings. We were given a broad choice of elective studies; our attendance at our courses was made voluntary. As is well known, this liberal system has, with certain wise regulations, been made still more liberal, and its principles have, through the changes in the entrance requirements, been extended into the secondary schools. The general principle has been adopted by the College that a Bachelor s degree is necessary for admission to all professional courses of study. This makes it important that the conditions for admission to the College or Scientific School shall be liberally conceived. Mr. W. C....
